9. Read the following passage and answer the following questions given below :
- We should never confuse education with training or the 'tools' that educators use. Education is no more computer of an online class than it is chalkboard- those are simply tools. Additionally, precious few new and relevant findings have been added to our insights into the learning process. Much of what many proclaim to be insightful turns out to be faddish and misguided. What we need for learning to occur is well prepared and motivated teachers, students who are willing and able to learn and a social system that values educational attainment. Many might take exception to these assertions, raising a host of ancillary social, economic, nutritional and sociological issues. However, decades of data from failed public experiments aimed at mitigating these problems argue to the contrary.

What are we to do ? Create a wave of educational entrepreneurship ? Despite all of the hype and media attention, no one currently knows the best way forward. We must incentivize educationalists, technologists and classroom teachers to experiment and innovate. Such partnerships should freely explore alternatives as we seek to define the blended face-to-face and online classrooms of the future. Some approaches will fail, but that is part of the change process. There will be no one-size-fits all experience; success will vary by discipline and educational objective. Unless everyone involved in this process is inspired to take risks, we will not enjoy the full potential these new approaches represent. Also, we should not forget the extent to which those who most benefit from the current system will attempt to hijack the change process for their own purpose.

Contentment gives us inner wealth, the wealth of the mind and of the soul. A contented man devotes himself to virtues like truth, beauty, love goodness, kindness and charity.
